

Volume 1 Number 1 January 2020

LOCAL DEVELOPMENT & SOCIETY

Local Development & Society will explore potentials and limitations of local growth and test evidence from academic research and practice against relevance in local societies. The journal supports theoretical and empirical research in a diversity of local contexts, with the aim of strengthening universities and organizations that produce research about communities' development and society. Areas of interest include but are not limited to planning, geography, economics, sociology and other disciplines. The scope is global and of interest to diverse social scientists, planners, researchers, policy makers, students, and practitioners.

Co-Editors-in-Chief

Rhonda Phillips, Purdue University, USA

Norman Walzer, Northern Illinois University, USA

Interested in submitting a manuscript? Six reasons why you should publish with Local Development & Society:

- ▶ Validate your research through a robust peer review process
- ▶ An international platform and global reach for your research
- ▶ Share your research with 50 free e-prints and tips on promoting your article
- ▶ Immediately see the impact of your research: track downloads, citations, and the Altmetric score of your article
- ▶ The option to publish Open Access if you choose
- ▶ A diverse range of manuscript types published; from original research to book reviews and more

We welcome your submissions!