

The European Union and the Promise of Democracy: What can Citizenship Education and Civil Society contribute?

Conference . 14–16 November 2013 . The Hague, the Netherlands

Background and aims

The societal and political debate concerning the future shape of the EU is entering a crucial phase. In the recent hectic years of crisis management, more and more decisions have been taken by fewer and fewer co-players in the democratic machine called Europe. According to recent surveys, many citizens now take a critical or even hostile stance towards the European Union, as it seems to have nothing to offer them but austerity and social sacrifices. National and populist feelings demonstrate the extent of a great collective uncertainty in European societies. We believe European citizenship educators are facing at least two major challenges resulting from this state of the European Union.

Firstly, Europe's ongoing economic crisis has engendered a crisis of confidence in the European project and the costs and benefits of further European integration. Fewer and fewer citizens are prepared to transfer power and competences to 'Europe'. The democratic deficit of the EU (once hidden by the 'implicit consensus' of European citizens in the early decades of the EU) has now become more and more visible and contributes to the backlash in support for the EU.

Secondly, the economic crisis is dividing Europe and may ultimately lead to the break up of the EU. Centrifugal forces are pulling European public opinion apart, separating the French from the Germans and the Germans from everyone else. The southern nations of Spain, Italy and Greece are becoming ever more estranged as evidenced by their frustration with Brussels, Berlin and the perceived unfairness of the economic system.

This is where the central questions begin that will be the focus of NECE 2013. "Participation Now!" was the motto of NECE 2012 in Córdoba (Spain), which concentrated on dialogue with grassroots movements of the Arab Spring. With an eye to the elections of the European Parliament in May 2014, NECE 2013 will continue to explore the topics of participation and democratisation and focus on the EU's democratic deficit. However, deploring the democratic deficit in the EU is one thing. Citizenship education, on the other hand, must critically examine its European policy campaigns and projects in terms of their coverage and effectiveness. And it should concentrate more on the criticism and doubts of frustrated European citizens. The conference in The Hague will offer opportunities for a critical debate on four levels:

- 1. Scenarios and outlines for the future of the EU
- 2. European civil society and the 'democratic deficit' of the European Union
- 3. Role of citizenship education in the European crisis
- 4. Practical approaches and projects of citizenship education

Opportunities to actively take part will be provided in numerous workshops and forums. At the end of the conference, the participants will draw up a public 'Conference Paper' comprising recommendations on the topic of democratisation and participation in the EU.

In order to prepare for the conference, a scenario workshop took place in The Hague in July 2013. The aim of the preparatory workshop was to develop scenarios on the future of the EU and on the role of citizenship education with an interdisciplinary group of stakeholders. The results of this scenario workshop will be presented in order to discuss the opportunities and challenges for citizenship education with all participants in smaller groups in three different rounds of the World Café. The discussed topics and aspects will be used to develop the “Conference Paper”.
